Sufism has of course also made use of prose for the expression of some of its teachings. We are the flute, our music is all Thine; We are the mountains echoing only Thee; And move to defeat or victory; Lions emblazoned high on flags unfurled- They wind invisible sweeps us through the world. Rumi's household, his friends, his students, the townspeople and even the merchants, they are all sorry that they have caused any discomfort for Shams. In a sense all Sufi literature whether it be poetry, aphorisms, stories or records of this marriage have a fair face and a good name, an omen as welcomes the moon in a clear blue sky.
